

REMARKS*Claim Rejections Under 35 U.S.C. § 103

Claims 1-22 were rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 103(a) as being unpatentable over Lin (U.S. Patent No. 6,839,860) in view of Yee (U.S. Patent No. 6,529,057). Applicant respectfully traverses this rejection.

Lin discloses a clock generator comprising a master delay locked loop and a slave DLL. The Examiner states that Applicant's claimed control circuit is disclosed in Lin at 156 of Fig. 2. However, this reference number is not disclosing a circuit as claimed by Applicant.

Applicant's claimed control circuit generates both a mode control signal and a delay control signal. Reference 156 of Fig. 2 in Lin is simply a select signal. No circuit is shown or described for generating this signal (see col. 3, lines 14 – 22).

Additionally, Applicant's control circuit generates more than just the mode control but also the delay control signal that is used to select amongst a plurality of different delay clock signals. Since Lin does not disclose an option to select from a plurality of different delayed clock signals, only a CLK90 signal is described, this claimed feature cannot even be suggested as desirable by Lin. Therefore, even though Yee discloses a multiplexer 82 for selecting amongst a plurality of delayed signals 84, 86, 88, there is no motivation to combine this circuit with Lin since there is no teaching on how these signals would be selected.

Even if it were obvious to combine Yee with Lin, and Applicant maintains that it is not, the combination still would not produce Applicant's invention as claimed. Yee also does not teach or suggest a control circuit that generates both a mode control signal and a delay control signal. Yee simply shows a “SEL” signal but does not disclose a circuit from which this signal is generated.
